Bush Roses

These are Salem-grown, acclimated rose bushes. We grow most of them in our own nursery. After digging, our bushes are stored outdoors, in moist air. We do not wax our bushes as this unnatural practice is only resorted to to give partial protection against drying out when the bushes must be kept in a dry store. The following list contains most of the better non-patented varieties that have proven adapted to Oregon conditions.

Our Nursery Prices Have Not Increased

While prices on all other commodities have increased the past two years, our nursery prices have either remained stable or have been reduced. during this period, in spite of increased cost of production.

Probably half of the rose prices in this list are lower than in our last year's list. Compare them.

We are able to hold prices down because . . .

We Grow Most of Our Stock

. . . and we have no high priced buildings and equipment to add to our costs.
